I thought I had written a review of this semi-marvelous book (similar to paint by numbers but done more neatly with stickers), but apparently it didn't stay in my file or something so here is an updated review, based on the fact that I have actually finished all of the pictures provided and now have a nice gallery of mosaic pictures. I won the book in one of Goodreads Giveaways and received it just a few days after I received my winner notification. In the beginning of this review, I called this a "semi-marvelous" book. That qualification is through no fault of the book which is wonderful and provides amazing finished pictures. No, the semi-marvelous is because I am anal and have to be absolute perfect in coloring and pasting from one picture to another. There is remarkable detail in these pictures, which means sometimes very tiny stickers to match to the corresponding numbers on the finished picture. Some of the pieces are so tiny that I had difficulty in getting them from the sticker page to the final picture and then some of them left very tiny which background spaces. Nothing that I couldn't live with once I accepted the fact that it was not a major catastrophe that there might have been a mini-millimeter space and, in fact, no one else noticed. So, in a nutshell, this book did help me relax eventually and I did end up with some great pictures. I might also say that all of my friends were impressed and some were going to check with Amazon to see if they could find it. Final verdict? Great book and if anyone as anal as I buys the book, get over the white background gaps. There aren't that many and they add to the charm of the picture.
