Derek Davis says

What an odd slop-together. Roughly a third of the stories are from the golden age of Weird Tales and show a fine ability to sew together style and plot. The rest are from something called Spicy Mystery Stories – very soft, giggle-worthy porn wrapped in mystery or supernatural blankets.

"The Lord of Illusion," an early draft of a Cthulhu story later rewritten by Lovecraft, becomes almost a philosophical treatise that goes far beyond the usual snot-drooling monsters of that mythos. "Saladin's Throne Rug" follows twists and turns of character to a truly horrific ending.

As so often with the pulpers, the need to churn out words at breakneck speed creates a kind of smelly verbal stew. Price's knowledge of religions and Mideastern artwork (especially rugs!) is staggering, but too often throw away on a shoddy story (the Spicy entries) with plot tossed together on the run. Other Price Megpacks, covering his detective stories, etc., are either out of in the works and sound like better bets.
