Design Like You Give a Damn {2}: Building Change from the Ground Up Architecture For Humanity

Design Like You Give a Damn [2] is the indispensable handbook for anyone committed to building a more sustainable future. Following the success of their first book, Architecture for Humanity brings readers the next edition, with more than 100 projects from around the world. Packed with practical and ingenious design solutions, this book addresses the need for basic shelter, housing, education, health care, clean water, and renewable energy. One-on-one interviews and provocative case studies demonstrate how innovative design is reimagining community and uplifting lives. From building-material innovations such as smog-eating concrete to innovative public policy that is repainting Brazil's urban slums, Design Like You Give a Damn [2] serves as a how-to guide for anyone seeking to build change from the ground up.

Praise for Design Like You Give a Damn [2]:

<!--StartFragment--> “The resourcefulness of the projects in the book is inspiring, its information practical (see Stohr’s chapter on financing sustainable community development) and its numerous factoids sobering.”

Alex says

Very inspirational stories of architects working for society rather than... well, other architects.

Rachel says

I liked the format of the first book a little better. It seemed like there was more variety of projects and more in depth. But this one was also very interesting!

Ambur Taft says

Awesome! Full of information and pictures and facts that will blow your mind.

Leonard says

A fascinating look at wise and intelligent design around the world; blessed with many photographs and a very informative text.

Nick Woodall says

This book was as good as the first one. Both books in this series focus on building indigenous buildings using local materials, that are high-quality and very functional for a people group. The diversity of the buildings and cultures is amazing.

From building-material innovations such as smog-eating concrete to innovative public policy that is repainting Brazil's urban slums, Design Like You Give a Damn [2] serves as a how-to guide for anyone seeking to build change from the ground up.

Kara says

There is a vast array of nearly every type of architecture showcased, from hospitals to personal residences to cafeterias to memorials.

What they all have in common is they are all designed by people who care about people. These architects care about everyone being provided with buildings that will help physical and mental health, that will help promote environmentalism and healthy lifestyles, that will withstand disasters or rise rapidly from them, homes that are affordable and schools that promote actual education.

A great reminder in this day and age that not all hope is lost with humanity.
