All across the country people are heading home for the holidays. Special presents are wrapped beneath the tree, mistletoe is hung, the smell of cookies is in the air, but what if you don't have someone special to share it all with?

Will the magic of Christmas reach these characters? Or will they end up being a bunch of lonely grinches?

Three up-and-coming young adult authors share their Christmas stories about hope and joy during the holiday season.

Amy says

A fun little book of sweet Christmas stories. It was a very easy and fast read. The stories were very light and fun. Like most short stories I wish for more

Candyce Kirk says

I love reading Christmas stories around this time of year, so reading this wasn't a hard decision. It fit all the things I love about these stories, Christmas time, a warm and fuzzy feeling and a happily ever after. These stories were sweet as the title tells us and even though the stories were written by three different authors, they were all equally good. My only complaint is that the stories were so short. I would've loved to read more about these characters.

3 Sweet Christmas Romances

This is a set of three Christmas stories with romance as a significant plot feature. These are sweet stories that will bring out your Christmas heart. All three were very good and I will look for more stories by all three authors.

These are very short but I liked the way they ended. Cute and believable. I would totally pick up another story by any of these authors.

Get a cup of tea or cocoa, a cookie or two, and settle in for a couple of hours of escape into three very distinct Christmas stories with a tinge of romance in Home for Christmas.

Kayla Tirrell pens 'Dirty Santa,' and if you're wondering how dirty this Santa is, rest easy. This title references the gifts that people take to the community Christmas Party. Jordin, a young woman who has flunked out of college and is ashamed and embarrassed by it all, is the tale's protagonist who learns to deal with her life as Ben, her childhood friend, is seen in a new light.

Daphne James Huff writes 'The Christ Redeemer Christmas Special,' a short story that has a Jamie, a poor young woman struggling in her own life, only to meet Austin. I confess I love stories with a bit of a theatre or a drama club, so this story was already on the right track. Add in a nemesis for the protagonist to win out over and you have a heartwarming tale where, even if you know it's going to end the way you want it to, you want to find out the details.

The third short story by M. F. Lorson, 'The Night Sale,' makes for a story that tugs at anyone who grew up in a small or medium-sized town, as the main character Elizabeth must deal with the myriad changes in Smockville that she is seeing for the first time, having been away for some time. Seeing her parents struggle to keep their Marshall's Tree Farm going is the story arc dealt with in this tale, and the tension between the Marshall's and the Yorks is presented realistically. "...I was letting fear hold me back..." says Elizabeth as she explains why she has changed so much, about two-thirds of the way through the story. Putting on a show or night of entertainment, Henry and Elizabeth find a way to work together, much like an Andy Hardy plot point. (Showing my age there, right?) The ability to find a way for people to give back during the Christmas season is a way communities come back to life and love bursts forth. A nice twist is a weather event that threatens a happy ending. Grab a copy or download it to read this sweet gem of a triad anthology in its first year of operation.

I received a copy of this as an eBook to read and have provided my review and opinion.
