Indulge Me by Kaenar Langford

Keane Daniels has received an anonymous note summoning him to Indulgence, one of the largest gay spa and bathhouses in Toronto. Since he's in unrequited lust with his boss, Keane thinks a clandestine tryst might just take his mind off his gorgeous colleague.

Rayche Marquette has wanted Keane since hiring him, but being his boss means Keane's off limits...until Rayche decides he can wait no longer and reserves the Wet Area of the spa so the two of them can spend a Naughty Nooner together.

Rayche and Keane meet in the elegant shower area, but when Keane discovers the sender of the note is his boss, his reaction is not what Rayche expects. Keane rebuffs him, thinking the lunch hour adventure is a lark for Rayche, a meaningless liaison. For Keane, that can never be enough with this man. How can he convince Rayche to turn their Naughty Nooner into a lifetime commitment?

Dalton's Awakening by Carol Lynne

After weathering a bitter divorce amongst rumours of his sexual preference, Dalton Montgomery finds solace at his favourite new restaurant Bella Lucina's. His lunches spent talking to the restaurant's bartender, Sal, get him through the lonely days and nights. When Dalton begins to feel attracted to the hunky bartender, his world spins out of control. Had his ex-wife been right?

Lunches in Laguna by J.P. Bowie

Scott is intrigued by an art collection in a Laguna gallery, but it's the gallery manager, Michael, who gets his full attention!

By his own admission Scott Stevenson is a rough and ready kind of guy, but even he can appreciate art on occasion, especially when it comes in the form of Michael Taylor, the manager of a Laguna Beach art gallery. Invited to spend a lunch hour with Michael, Scott doesn't hesitate to let his new friend know he considers him a perfect work of art.

The attraction is mutual and the two men start seeing each other regularly for 'lunch'. But when Michael fails to show up at the gallery one day Scott discovers that his perfect man may have an imperfect past, and if Scott wants lunch to progress to dinner he'd better ensure that those who are threatening Michael aren't around for dessert!

Raven by Dakota Rebel

In a club owned by vampires that feed on lust, it may end up being more than your neck on the line.

Raven is the hottest gay club in Detroit. It is owned by Patrick and Kennedy, two vampires who emit so much sexual energy the club could run itself for days on it. They had always enjoyed smoking, drinking, and grabbing as much action as they could from their patrons so they could brag to each other about their conquests.

But lately, Patrick has had enough. And when a young, hot blond shows up vying for Kennedy's attention, it's time for Patrick to teach him a lesson, and take his rightful place at his partner's side.

Lust in the Afternoon by Cian Fey

Sometimes all it takes is one afternoon.

Ted Wayne is the IT manager at a gay online magazine and bookstore that also provides live streaming peep shows. During a fierce snowstorm, the on-air talent can't make it in for the "Lust in the Afternoon" show, and only Ted is around to fill the void.

Art director Grayson Jeffries talks Ted into fifteen minutes in front of the camera, Ted agrees partly because he thinks Gray is the hottest thing going. He's reluctant to masturbate in front of Gray, but at least with Gray in the room, he has no worries about getting it up.

Gray has wanted Ted for months - now he has this one chance to make all his fantasies come true.

Lunch is Served by Jude Mason

Admitting you're gay is difficult enough. Can Philip Sands go even farther and admit he wants to be dominated?

Philip Sands needs a job. When he finds one at The Gate Room, a gay BDSM club owned and run by the sexy Mark Freeman, he's faced with a dilemma. He'd admitted to being gay years ago, but had hidden his submissive side, even from himself. Dressed in the sexy leather gear required for his new job, Philip finds himself drawn into the lifestyle and lusting after Mark. Constantly aroused by the scenes taking place in the club, the duties he's asked to perform are more than a little frustrating.

An evening meeting, which turns out to be so much more, only adds to his torment. When Mark invites him to come in for lunch the following day, Philip jumps at the chance. Will their meeting turn into more? Will he finally find the courage to tell Mark his feelings? And what does the handsome Mark have in mind?

Finally an anthology that is a collection of my favorite writers instead of one favorite and some other people who write badly. Loved it!

Some of these short stories are significantly better than others. I appreciated the wide variety; there is a D/s story, one with vampires, a tale of gay for you, a boss/employee, a fairy godfather, and strangers who fall in love.

All of these are HEA love stories. Within this box, some of these stories were sMUCH more believable than others. Some were instaloves which seemed totally ridiculous.

I was disappointed by how many of the male characters in here got 'tearful'? It seemed like the only way for tea emotion to be conveyed was to have a character tear up. No. Just no. Even sensitive men can keep their shit together. I just wasn't buying that. I struggled with all the telling in the stories and wished for more showing. This is a major literary pet peeve of mine.

Overall, this isn't a terrible collections, one or two of the stories were quite cute, but none wowed me. The compilation was nice while not becoming great.

I picked up this anthology for two reasons. Firstly I'd been looking at the recent releases at TEB and noticed a few of their short stories which I fancied reading. Then I saw they were all from the same anthology, Naughty Nooners, re-released as separate stories, so I thought I may as well get the whole anthology. Secondly, I was in the mood for something hot and steamy and these shorts seemed to fit the bill. Unfortunately for me the stories weren't just the quick and nasty sexy tales I'd been anticipating, but longer stories made up of page after page of sex (often 3 or more scenes within the story) and after the 1st sex scene I began to lose interest as the rest of the sex in the story was often just the same old, same old. To compound the problem, many of the stories also contained one of my dislikes, insta-love. This meant that not only did I struggle through endless dull sex scenes, I got to the end of the stories only to find an implausible HEA tacked onto the end.

Obviously, the above is just my general feelings about the anthology as a whole. There were one or two stories which I enjoyed for the most part. My favourite story was Raven by Dakota Rebel, which told the story of two vampires who own a gay club. The two heroes have been ignoring their feelings for each other for while until the appearance of another man sets wheels in motion that brings them together. Whilst the vampire theme was interesting, what I liked more was the secondary character of Samson who was a mix of bravado and dominance which was at odds with his slight figure and twinkly looks. In some ways I wanted to know more about him than I did the vampires and I wonder whether another story featuring him is on the cards.

Another story I liked was Lunch is Served by Jude Mason which features new guy at a BDSM club, Philip, whose job it was to keep an eye on the scenes, help out the Doms and generally act as eye candy/security in one of the dungeon rooms. Despite all the flesh on display, Philip is more interested in the club boss, Mark. The story wasn't perhaps the most realistic I've read, but the sexual tension was nicely high and the sex itself some of the best written in the anthology. I also liked Philip's mix of extreme embarrassment over his skimpy 'uniform' and trying to appear nonchalant.

Out of the other four stories, honourable mentions need to go to Dalton's Awakening by Carol Lynne, which dealt sympathetically with a straight to gay theme, and Lust in the Afternoon by Cian Fey which put together an IT nerd with a porn site cameraman to great effect.

None of the stories in the anthology were badly written and yet there were parts of all the stories which dragged a little for me. I would have been happy to read stories centred around a hot noon encounter, but these stories tried to fit that within a longer narrative which didn't always work. Still, if you like insta-love (or characters who realise they are in love through sex); like long drawn out sex scenes; and are willing to suspend your disbelief a little, then this book will be for you.

2.5 stars. Ok collection of m/m romance short stories about steamy lunch hour interludes and instalove.

Correct story. Dislike Rayche.

Dalton's Awakening by Carol Lynne

A good story. Sweet.

Lunches in Laguna by J.P. Bowie

Love the story. Ending anticlimactic.

Raven by Dakota Rebel

Not vampire but succubus. One of the two MC had a 'perpetual five o'clock shadow'...Question: He don't shave or if it's the case, that's regrow like that? Not a bad story. Hint for a future threesome.

Lust in the Afternoon by Cian Fey

Because of the resume I thought that's was going to be hot but no it's was sweet enough to root your teeth. And WTF was that epilogue?

Elisa Rolle says

The common theme of the various stories are the naughty nooners, those encounters you have during your lunch break, instead to eat... quite a good way to stay in shape! Anyway, the "naughty" in the title, and the situation that usually leads to forbidden lovers, are a sure hints that the stories are mostly light and without angst.

Indulge Me by Kaenar Langford: Keane has an unrequited love for his boss Rayche (side note: but the two are drawn together since both have such strange name? ;-)) ; it's months that he lusts for the man and only a brief encounter with a mysterious stranger in a exclusive gay spa broke his involuntary celibacy. And so when he receives an anonymous note inviting him to that same spa for a noon appointment, naked..., Keane decides to give it a try. And when he finds there Rayche, he is not sure that he wants to give on for only a naughty nooner.

The story is light and very naughty, mostly about free sex without two very handsome men; sometime, reading on their hot encounter, I had the impression to be reading a script for a porn movie, but then, that is the purpose, isn't it?

Dalton's Awakening by Carol Lynne: Dalton is out from a bad divorce: his wife accused him to be gay, even if Dalton never had a gay experience in his life. It's not clear if he thought about it, maybe deep in the closet which is his conscience, some idea wandered in his mind, but he never acted on them. And then he meets by chance Sal, the sexy and gentle owner of an Italian restaurant near his office. Their noon encounters begin to be a necessity for Dalton, who lost all his friends with the divorce. But Sal wants something more from him than a good friend.

The story is really tender; it's clear to everyone that Dalton and Sal are made for each other, but Sal knows that he needs to be careful with Dalton, he is like a newborn baby and has to learn everything again, and above all he needs to trust again. The scene in which Dalton calls on the phone a friend only to be rebutted is so sad but also so right to create the right background for the character.

Lunches in Laguna by J.P. Bowie: apparently Scott is a young and simple man, who enjoys the eye candy of all the men strolling up and down along Laguna Beach; yes, Scott is simple, but he comes out to me as a romantic at heart, willing to fall in love at first sight when he sees Michael, the gallery's owner he spots during a lunch break. That Michael is willing to return the feeling is a dream comes true. But then Michael's past rears its head, and Scott has to decide if he wants for a noon romance to become the love of his life.

Probably the most romantic story of the anthology, I really like the easy feeling between Scott and Michael, the little love tokens the two exchange, like a simple rose bought by instinct. With the one by Carol Lynne, it's probably the story which more is in line with the theme of the anthology. I also like a lot Scott's character, so shy but at the same time so charming, I believe he enchanted Michael more for his awkwardness than for anything else.

Raven by Dakota Rebel: Patrick and Kennedy are two not very old vampires who opened a gay club to have an harem at hand for their needs (at this regard, I don't understand if the two are vampires or incubus, since more than living on blood, they seems to live on sex). Anyway, Kennedy is the indiscriminate of the two, the one for whom everyone is the right one, and instead Patrick is the selective one, maybe also since he has a hidden interest on Kennedy. And when Samson, a man who was sniffing around Kennedy, now tries to same with Patrick, Patrick decides that maybe it's time for him to reclaim his partner, not only for business reason.

The game between the three characters, Patrick, Kennedy and Samson is quite interesting, but probably for a short story is too much. There is a lot happened before and probably there will be a lot after, and on the few pages of the story I have no time to feel for the characters as I would like. And then, as I said, Patrick and Kennedy are more the incubus type than vampires.

Lust in the Afternoon by Cian Fey: this one is really nice and naughty all together. Ted is an IT manager for a gay website which, everyday at noon serves to its customers live peeping shows. But due to a snow storm, only three person are in the building, Ted, Grayson, the art director and Nathalie, the secretary. Obviously Nathalie doesn't have the necessary equipment, and Gray is needed behind the camera, and so Ted wins the today role in front of the camera. Not that it's a big problem for him to have an hard one to show, since he has the hots for Gray since weeks, and when he discovers that the feeling is mutual...

Very nice interracial story (Gray is an African American young man), between the geeky Ted and the handsome Gray; despite working for a gay website, both Ted than Gray are simple guys, I would say also romantic, and they are only waiting for a nice chance to "come out" to the man who stars in their daydreams.

Lunch is Served by Jude Mason: Philip needs a job, Mark has a job. The problem is that, during the job interview for a waiter job in a BDSM club, Philip was full dressed, and he was able to hide the hard on he had for Mark. But when he starts to work in the club, he finds out that his "uniform" is a leather harness with a very small leather jock... quite impossible to hide now. Lucky him, Mark seems very interested in what he has to show.

Despite the BDSM setting, I found the story quite funny: Philip is very much distressed from the fact that his body, and in particular a very center part of his body, has decided to have its own mind... well, at least, it gains him higher tips!
