"Sometimes it is the stark, matter-of-fact letters from uprooted soldiers home that best capture the mood of the times. Such is the case with Alfred Earl Jones, a private from rural California who fought in World War I, whose letters provide personal drama and are historically informative."

- Peter Krass, author of Portrait of War: The U.S. Army's First Combat Artists and the Doughboys' Experience in WWI

"This marvelously annotated collection of letters transports us back to the training camps, high seas, and battlefields; recounting the novelty, boredom and terror that so many young American men experienced going to war in 1917-18. These citizen-soldiers remained civilians at heart, and these letters attest to the importance of family in keeping men going at the front - offering an invaluable lesson for Americans today."

- Jennifer D. Keene, author of Doughboys, the Great War and the Remaking of America (2001).

Catherine Stickann says

Flowers from No Man's Land is an interesting book of letters written by an American, WWI, soldier, Alfred Earl Jones home to his loved ones. It is a book made up largely of full page copies of the letters, and their transcriptions . Primary sources are so important to preserve, in this case the language of a young man, his view of the military life and his thoughts from the front lines are preserved for many to study. Additional photos and background information bring the book alive.
