I think the book was darling, and I love pop ups. I prefer a more cohesive book. Board books tend to be random.

My son received this book as a Christmas present. He has finally just mastered all of his colors and he gets a big kick out of naming them, so this book is fun for that (obviously). The pop-ups are also sturdy and cute. When we read this the first time I thought maybe it's a bit young for my almost-three-year-old because the text is really simple and includes cues like, "Say bye-bye!" But it turns out the simple text has been a big plus because after just a couple of reads he can now "read" this himself. I overheard him reading it to his six-week-old sister and it melted my heart. I'm sure she'll love it, too, once she can focus on the pictures.

ETA October 2016: L (just shy of two) has recently become interested in this book. The pop-ups are still in decent shape even though we've had the book for almost 2 years. A couple of the animals have fallen off, but my daughter actually thinks that's a perk and she now tucks them in and out of the book as she reads it. She doesn't know her color names yet but thoroughly enjoys saying the names of all of the stuffed animals.
