With Biology for the Informed Citizen, students connect the concepts of biology to the consequences of biology. Authors Donna M. Bozzone and Douglas S. Green teach the concepts of biology, evolution, and the process of science so that students can apply their knowledge as informed consumers and users of scientific information.

Cases: An engaging biological issue opens every chapter and is revisited throughout

Concepts: Foundational biological ideas are introduced within the context of important cultural and social issues

Consequences: The concepts and consequences of biology are connected in order to help students make informed decisions about biological issues

Biology for the Informed Citizen is available with or without chapters 11-15 on physiology. Both versions allow instructors to cover the chapters and topics in the order that they choose.

Lindsay says

This textbook reads nicely. The case studies are interesting and make some of the chapters read like stories. Even if you know nothing about Biology you can learn a lot from this book.

Karyna says

As textbooks go, this was well written. I really like how it was very universal, in a sense that the author(s) spoke about many different countries as examples throughout the entire book. It gives me, as a student, a much wider perspective.

However, I do feel it may have been a little out of touch for the reason stated above. There were times I feel things could have been better understood or sympathized with if it would had hit a little closer to home.
