Crime: Its Cause and Treatment Clarence Darrow

Clarence Darrow was an American lawyer and leading member of the American Civil Liberties Union. He is remembered for defending teenage thrill killers Leopold and Loeb and defending John T. Scopes in the Scopes Trial (1925). Darrow began his career as a corporate lawyer and soon switched to criminal law. Darrow was an eloquent speaker and often spoke out against the death penalty. Here Darrow presents his ideas on the latest scientific thought and investigation bearing upon the question of human conduct. Darrow says, "My main effort is to show that the laws that control human behavior are as fixed and certain as those that control the physical world. In fact, that the manifestations of the mind and the actions of men are a part of the physical world."

Andrea Hickman Walker says

There are some ideas put forward in this book that I agree with, and that I think are still relevant today. There are others that clearly date the material and that I cannot agree with. There are still other ideas that I just don't agree with, though others might. Not having much actual experience with crime or criminals, it's quite easy to have opinions without really thinking of them as applying to people I know or care about.

Just brilliant. Should be a 'must read' for all criminal justice mandarins.
