JUROR NUMBER THREE is the author's account of her experience in a high-profile capital murder trial conducted in Phoenix, Arizona. The trial was interesting and even had its share of 'jury intrigue', but the book also allows the reader to experience what a juror is called upon to do in a trial of this type. The jury instructions, testimony, evidence and exhibits let the reader determine what their decision might have been as a juror on this case.

I really enjoyed this book. I am one of those people who hate when I get that jury duty summons, but also find it to be interesting. I have never been on a case, it was enjoyable to follow the journey and to get some clues to what it is like to become a juror. I recommend this book to anyone interested. It is easy to read, but I advise reading when you can put yourself totally into the book. I was lucky to have won this book through a GoodReads contest.

This book is about the author's experience as a juror in a murder trial in Arizona. It is a detailed account of what happened in the courtroom and the jury room. It's great for anyone who likes to peek behind the curtain to see what really goes on. The book describes the information the jury must rely on to reach a verdict which could result in life or death in this case. In short, "Juror Number Three" details the challenges jurors confront when trying to reach a verdict based on limited information. It is an easy read and I highly recommend it.
