David says

Surely a a good way to think, a good way to act, a good way to deal with reality (seen an un/seen) but... only in a positive way... if there's something capable to transform something positive into a negative ignoring it in the real/real with my own thought... mmmmmm... doesn't feel like me fighting for what I think is wrong (if this make sense). I'm no expert in the subject, and I don't want to be, perhaps all I wrote (I'm about to write) is dead wrong but religion has a subtle way to deal with things which cannot be subject to experimentation and science has a hard way to experiment so hard on any other measurable thing (in the reach of human comprehension)... (sighs) So much to say, but without someone by my side, without a coffee/beer/tea to offer and a will to engage in all the intricate situations this kind of read brings upfront I will be wrong and right in small proportions... (double sighs) whoever reads this words will see a lot, A LOT of flaws and an abrupt end.

Science is so far from the common person that now seems like unreachable sorcery... only the "new wizards" can understand it and make some decisions over all of us (which I consider OK) but are those decisions correct? The last I saw... there's a Falcon Heavy, an (at this point) an hypothetical wall to be built between Mexico and the US, a clear monetary wall between poor and rich, people with some degree of education and those who has nothing, financial "cartels", oil "cartels", politics "cartels" "other cartels" and the only cartel I belong is the you are Fed UP cartel (in our capitalist way of thinking, surely a Brazilian native has not developed the complexity which binds us all to understand what I just wrote).

... on the other hand, religion gives you the opportunity to un/hook yourself from this "cartel" conception, offering a way of thinking (or approaching to situations: from the we are nothing to the we are gods)... and yet if you mix all this in a hot soup and let every single person be what they want to be... you have a society trying to live not only in a planet on their own which ultimately, will desire to conquer the universe and a thousand more Fing every god, idea, black hole, white hole, galaxies in between. Is this OK? I don't know, but surely it is possible and probable, just add time.

WHAT ARE WE? I think this is the question to be answered individually, in small groups, in big groups and ultimately for all of us. Is it posible to answer it... no, no, no, I don't think so but the constant effort is of great help for all of us.

What I don't like about the current situation (for all of us) is that it looks like the output of all our energy transformation hence production, (all of them) if you consider each an every human being alive NOW 2018 in the equation, is sad and sadness.

If we do not get along with ourselves war will be the constant even if we succeed leaving earth and implement any number of ecopoyesis projects... we can dream about conquering stars and live in other planets... but our intellectual capacity has been the same since the first Homo Sapiens, our complexity of thoughts, abstraction and memory has increased but, intelligence? I just remembered the Homo Sapiens who ran over people in (anywhere) and killed "someone", used a nice car, I guess had some degree of studies and because all of that, lived in an advanced "country"... killing someone who helped the economy for you to have what you have, even your killing and rage thoughts... again WHAT ARE WE?

Man/woman ... I don't know what I'm writing any more.
