This was kind of an odd story. The ice cream man made a cupcake machine. That anyone that put a dollar in could make a cupcake of their choice. So Pinkalicious was first but she didn't get a cupcake, the other children didn't either. So Pick climbed in the machine and got mixed in the batter and eventually the machine blew up and out popped a huge cupcake with her on the top of the cupcake. Even my special needs adult son kind of frowned and I asked him 'how would you like to be baked in a cupcake" He said 'no eat me' ... So kind of be aware of this story...some may think it's funny but other children may think it's weird and others may think it's scary...

My toddler chose this at the library and she found it amusing. My own expectations were very low, but it was an ok read. Don't expect any valuable lessons to come out of this though.

The owner of the ice cream parlor decides to expand his business into cupcakes with the help of a flashy new gizmo, but the Cupcake-Create-O-Matic fails to launch on its maiden voyage. While Mr. Swizzle consults the owner's manual, Pinkalicious, impatient for her cupcake, decides to take matters into her own hands ... with zanily disastrous results.

This is my preschooler's new favorite book, and we have read it a dozen times so far. It's cute in its silliness and shorter and less difficult to endure than many other children's books that I have been forced to read multiple times.

Rather than containing any moral such as always do a test run before going live with something new , don't attempt home repairs on sophisticated equipment, or even stick to what you know, it seems to be in the storytelling tradition of lovable protagonist gets in wacky trouble after which everyone has a good laugh, and the damage is simply written off. The story inexplicably reminded me of the episode of "I Love Lucy" in which Lucy and Ethel stomp grapes. Perhaps it's the vino-gelato connection.

If this book put you in the mood for another cupcake catastrophe, try Fancy Nancy and the Delectable Cupcakes.

I am so proud of our daughter Lydia Mae! Today she brought home this cute book, Pinkalicious and the Cupcake Calamity, from her school library as her take home reader. This particular book was dedicated to our daughter, with name inside. This is her 100th book read in 2nd grade. Along with the book dedication she also received a keychain that says she is a 100 book reader. Like mother like daughter! She really enjoys Pinkalicious books, as this is her favorite series, what a nice book dedication! This is another colorfully illustrated and exceptionally Pinktastic book, highly recommended for all Pinkalicious fans.

Pinkalicious wants a cupcake so bad that she tries to fix the cupcake machine but, instead of fixing it she makes a giant pink cupcake and breaks the machine.
