Valerie Steimle says

I love this book. Julie Rowe continues in her explanation of her near-death experience from A Greater Tomorrow. Some might think it's redundant but the book has very appropriate information for these end of times. There are more details of emergency preparedness and what Julie saw in her future. The urgency in which she encourages everyone to be prepared helps others to gain a witness of what we need to do to withstand the trials of the future of our country.

essentially a repeat of book one. that alone confused me greatly- I really don't think she added anything new- other than more scripture maybe, as well as her own interpretations of everything. there was no detail in either book, which made me wonder if she really experienced it in person...or it was just a series of dreams. it's nice if this all really happened- I have no problem with it- but I really think these things need to be kept to ourselves, as prophets such as Brigham Young have stated...

also, I think she was trying to justify something with all her talk on prophets. however, until I hear this come from a prophet- I can't quite conform to it.

I liked this book alot. I like Julie Rowe's frankness and get to the point style writing. The subject matter would be hard for anyone to fully understand if you aren't a Mormon. Just saying. I recommend this book to be read after her previous book. The two go together but you should clearly read her first book, A Greater Tomorrow, first. I like the fact that her visions and dreams and revelations are very similar to other people who have seen the other side of the veil. Not identical but close. Close enough that it gives validation to her but also to them. In this particular book, I liked that she referenced revelation from past presidents and apostles. I too hear people say, "Well, if this was all true, then the Prophets and apostles would be screaming it from the pulpit". Actually, they do. And they did. I know so many people who are faithful but who aren't obedient. So many saints that I know, do not have a real food storage. Yet we have been commanded and counseled to do so. That's what I mean, they are faithful but don't actually "do". What they call a food storage is maybe 2 weeks. So ironic too. We live in a time where wealth and prosperity to the Saints is at an all time high, but yet, most are not prepared.

Very intriguing and easy to buy into at first. After hearing Elder Ballard's talk Oct 2017 I felt he was answering my questions about this and the sometimes parallel energy healing movement. I've since "repented" and I'm not involving myself in this genre or culture anymore. Before this I was still sorting it out and discerning for myself but I feel quite clear on that matter and have no ill feeling toward Julie. I actually enjoyed getting to know her via her podcasts. It's all interesting and captivating the content she covers but it's no longer something I'll spend time or energy on. Save your money. Don't buy the book. Save your time. Read a conference talk instead. Those who get involved anyway, please be careful. We've been warned by the brethren it's "spurious" in nature and can lead to false understandings of doctrine.

This second book gives light to some of the details that weren't covered as much in A Greater Tomorrow. I found this book helpful to have a knowledge of events that will transpire before the Lord's Second Coming so that I can recognize the signs when they occur and prepare myself and my family for the physical and spiritual trials that we may be called to endure.

Karen says

I am so grateful for this information and knowledge

Thank you Julie for sharing with us this information in such a wonderful way I feel very blessed to know it

Love

I loved this book. Very interesting subject matter. I would recommend this book to all of my family. It is always a good idea to be prepared for any coming event.

Mia Merrill says

Loved this book. It syncs with other LDS Near death experiences I have read, and is very informative about what we should do to prepare for the last days. It completely coincides with LDS religious beliefs, modern revelation and the scriptures. I am grateful for the insight she has given me in regards to emergency preparedness and also energy healing. Loved it!

Clark says

This book is quite similar to the author's previous offering, covering essentially the same information but with areas of focus on some items that offer incrementally more details. That the book, published November 2014, cites several events from as late as October 2014 points to the speed of writing and care of organization and editing encountered. Again, the author provides prophetic warnings about the future and advice on how best to prepare. This all presupposes a Mormon ideology of world history and scriptural interpretation and this book, much, much more than her first work, is squarely aimed at a Mormon audience.

I would guesstimate that about one-fourth of this book consists of quotes, often fairly lengthy, of LDS prophets and apostles, and also scriptural quotes. These quotes generally have an apocalyptic tone.

The author purports to be a voice of warning to the faithful, comparing her self-proclaimed prophetic calling to the apostolic calling of John: “God specifically foreordained and called upon the Apostle John to write about the things he had been shown pertaining to the last days and the second coming of the Lord” (p. 19). Throughout the book the author stresses her visionary experiences repeatedly by stating “I was shown...” (e.g., pp. 39-40). In her first book the author discusses a very specific extended vision that purportedly occurred during a forty-eight hour near-death experience. In this book the author expands upon that, stating that her visions and dreams began in the fall of 1990 and continued up to and through her near-death experience in 2004, after which time they continued and dramatically increased (p. 43). The latest date specifically cited for a visionary experience is May, 2012 (p. 150). These twenty and more years of visionary experience far surpass what was noted in the first book.

There are occasional minor points of proposed new doctrine explicated, such that there are temples in the Spirit World where the spirits of the dead must perform ordinances similar to the vicarious ordinances performed on earth. This symmetry of ordinance work is required to link the two efforts into a valid ordinance (refer to e.g. p. 35). While this is not necessarily unreasonable, it clearly is well beyond anything revealed in scripture.

Much of the book’s eschatology is devoted to a consideration of various tent cities and Places of Refuge that will be formed primarily by Mormons, but also by other peoples of faith, during difficult times. The rationale for postulating about mass evacuations to tent cities is based solely on the author’s visions, and does not appear to be based on Mormon doctrine per se. She states there will be “hundreds” of tent cities, “many dozens” of Places of Refuge, and about six Cities of Light (p. 61), each increasing in spirituality and safety from the previously listed type of place. These various refuges are scattered around the world but heavily concentrated in North America and especially Utah, where Logan and Manti are noted as being the approximate location of two such future safe havens. One fairly lengthy passage (notable for being minutely detailed, while the remainder of the book is quite vague) details the author’s family’s future automobile route from Kansas City to Southern Utah, to Price Canyon, to I-15, through Sardine Canyon (near Logan), and from thence a hike of several miles to a Place of Refuge guarded by cowboys on horseback. Too, the author provides an extended list of items to be readied and also muses about transportation, electricity, water, the economy, and so forth. This is oddly juxtaposed with statements such as “Our leaders will prepare us for upcoming changes...” (p. 65) and so forth. E.g., if they will prepare us then what need of this book?

Various types of severe destruction are enumerated, with a heavy focus on biological weapons and the dreaded EMP. Cities specifically mentioned as being nearly entirely destroyed are Seattle, San Francisco, Oakland, Los Angeles (p. 96), New York City (p. 98), and Chicago (p. 112). In this book the author notes the Statue of Liberty will be half-way submerged by the sinking of Ellis Island (in the first book the author claimed the Statue of Liberty would be destroyed by bombing). Chicago is noted as the site of manufactured race tensions and race riots and apparently will be the location of the outbreak of America’s Next Civil War. Fairly routinely in the book the author states that she knows much more detail but is prevented from disclosing it because the Lord will not give her permission. I suspect that in the next book, the Lord will have given some permissions.

Sounding like a contemporary Milton William Cooper, the author expatiates several engineered biological plagues that will sweep the globe. Apparently, an evil cabal of power-mongers wants to control the world and feels the best way to do this is to de-populate most of it. For example, the author states of Ebola that it is “manufactured and purposefully mutated to cause the most harm possible and to...” (p. 105) evade detection as a biological agent, etc. Plus the EMP. Don't forget the EMP. But pack a calculator just in case. And miniature scriptures.

The book ends with an Appendix (text available online at the author's web site) which extols the virtues of The Emotion Code, The Body Code, and energy healing, as well as noting the amazing fact that until recently you couldn't google Dr. Bradley Nelson.

Lorena says

Great book! I liked how she added more scriptures and prophetic quotes to this book. She adds more detail than she had in her previous book, A Greater Tomorrow. My favorite thing about this book is that she addresses specific questions that I had after reading A Greater Tomorrow, such as whether we gather with families or wards/stakes, what we do with our Journals and Photo Albums, and others. I really appreciate Julie Rowe and her willingness to share what she knows. I loved her chapter at the end on Emotion Code and Body Code! I use Emotion Code frequently, so hearing her perspective on it was great. I recommend this book!

Christy says

Julie isn't going to write any more books about her experience. Her 2 books aren't meant to be works of scholarship, they are simply meant to testify of Christ and tell what to expect and how to prepare for his coming.

There is new information in this book, and it is worth the read. It was published to answer questions that came up due to her first book. Many of the answers in this one are, "I'm not allowed to say," "I don't know," or "that's a great question for you to pray about and get an answer yourself." I think it's meant to be that way; a strong message that Julie isn't to be followed around like a celebrity. She has said what she is allowed to say and if you have a question, pray about it.

I can sum up both books like this:

Trust in the Lord.

DON'T miss a broadcast on a Sunday evening from the Prophet.

Follow the prophet.

Get at least a year supply of food, more if possible, because 7 years would be great.

Get warm clothing.

Get a 4 season tent.

Get a water purifier.

Get a tent stove.

LOVE camping. (That's a hard one for me)

Expect miracles. Every kind of miracle from the scriptures and more.

Those are the survival basics.

I don't have a problem with getting information about how to spiritually and temporally prepare for the coming of Christ from people who have had NDE, dreams and visions. Use the spirit to know which are valid and of worth. The scriptures say that in the latter days people will dream dreams and have visions. The events of this book have been prophesied about in the scriptures and from modern day prophets. Many of those quotes are in this second book. The detailed coming events described in these two books can't come to us over the pulpit, it just can't. Think about it.

I've read 4 NDE books that describe the same events. I've read dozens of dreams and visions about different aspects or parts of what these NDE books describe. If I've read of that many, there must be thousands of accounts of such experiences. The Lord is merciful and is getting the message of what we need to physically (and spiritually) prepare for His coming out to people.

I pray God will be with us and that we waste no time becoming a Zion people.

Ed says

This book adds very little to the first books' depiction of her NDE. However, she constantly says that she has additional information but has been forbidden to reveal it. Why even mention this knowledge unless she is trying to entice others to buy her books so that they may get some of this hidden knowledge? As this is her second book published in the same year and they each cost $15 I'm not convinced that she is trying to share the message of her NDE and how we can prepare but instead get the feeling she is trying to convince readers to buy her books.

This book is mostly about how to prepare both physically and spiritually for the last days when the saints are gathered to places of refuge before the storm of the second coming of Christ. While the message is good I question the format it is delivered in and the veracity of the source. She constantly says that she has been told by God that this information is for her family and she can't receive revelation for others but then lays out all the information as if it is for everyone. In her narrative she claims that the time must be very soon these things will happen since in her NDE her husband doesn't look much different. Considering her NDE occurred over 10 years ago I'm not sure how accurate that statement can be.

Also she endorses a healing system at the very end of her book. She claims she has not been asked to endorse the good doctor but a search for his practice reveals the substantial price tag associated with his services. If Mrs. Rowe is really trying to spread the word about how we can heal ourselves and prepare for the second coming she has chosen an odd way of doing so.

Jill says

My mom sent me this for my birthday. It was a very fast, interesting read. I'm not quite sure what to make of it, but it had some very interesting things in it, for sure. It reads a little too much like a church talk, but oh well. You can get past it. I'm about to mail my copy to a friend who is big into The Emotion Code. I know that's becoming very trendy these days.

Troy says

I read this to see what all of the craziness was about. I was disappointed. I know there many people who think this and her other book are great and tell of future events. I'm a faithful member of the Church of Jesus Christ and I believe there is a prophet on Earth and that God speaks to us. Julie says over and over how we are given revelation for ourselves and for those we are responsible for. Then in the next sentence she will say the spirit told her to write the things she saw in her NDE about the future events of the LDS church. The prophet receives revelation for the church and the world as a whole not Julie. She says follow the prophet but then gives what she has seen as the word of the Lord. I would not recommend this book. Follow the prophet and take this book with a grain of salt.

Gouchsmith says

Have you ever tried a new meal, and it is so disappointingly bad that after two bites you just can't even bring yourself to swallow the rest of it. This book is that meal.
