I can think of several year 3s who'd love this.

Helen says

A quick easy read - picked for my Chatterbooks for 'spy month'.

Butchart has captured Izzy's 'voice' really well. The kids' imaginations get them into all sorts of silly situations, but from the child's POV, they are perfectly logical and believable.

A fun story.

This rather funny tale, is about a girl called Izzy, her friends and a French spy called Mathilde. Izzy is excited when she is asked to look after the new French student Mathilde but Mathilde isn't very friendly and ignores Izzy and her friends. When they see how much Izzy loves school dinners even having seconds, they know something must be wrong with Matilde, she is a spy! The book follows the mystery of why Mathilde is spying on their school. Each chapter comes up with a new theory of what Mathilde really is doing at their school and how they can stop her!

This book allows young readers to use their imagination coming up with their own ideas of what Mathilde is doing at the school. It has a lovely heartwarming ending to the story. I would suggest this book was for children aged 5-8. Because of the small chapters I think this book would be great to read out loud in the class as it has good size chapters, a suspenseful storyline and would appeal to the whole class.

NZBook Girl says

Fun school-based story with clubs, friendship issues, misunderstandings and a great bit of mystery surrounding the new French girl who they think is a spy, in no small part because she actually likes the school dinners! Will be recommending it for confident readers in my girls' school library.

My parents picked this up for my 10 year old boy, but regretted it a little after flicking through because they thought it was 'too girly'. He enjoyed it, despite most of the characters (other than 1 friend of the main character and a mum's bf) being female.

I'm not sure quite what age it's aimed at - I read it to him as a bedtime story, but I know he could have read it himself. I just don't know if he would have been interested enough in it to do so.

As a parent reading it, I actually quite enjoyed it. It was amusing enough to keep me from being bored. I may have to go find the previous book with the same characters now.

I was really not expecting to enjoy this but it was thoroughly enjoyable, had a really great understanding of how children think and speak and was generally a feel good read with some laugh out loud moments and a few poignant asides.

LOVED IT. This book was so funny there was a few moments where I laughed out loud ! Although this book is written from an eight year olds point of view and I am probably much too old for it I will be reading the others in the series.
