First, Lauren returns home from school, only to discover that her parents are moving down south for the year, leaving her all alone. Then, Lauren quickly finds out that there's a possibility that she won't be graduating with her class unless she makes up the two classes she's failed. All the while, the entire town is gossiping about Lauren's handsome new neighbor, a boy she has yet to meet.

Everything really blows up in her face with her nerd-boyfriend Andre kidnaps her. There's something different about him; very different. He has a secret to tell her, a secret that has been with Lauren all alone.

It was rather short, I got the idea of the book; but thought blah of it. I find it okay. Guess I'd have to read the other pieces to really find out if I like it or not... The concept is a good one though. So I'll wait and see... @@

Not too bad for a short series.

This is first part in a series of short stories.. I really liked it..

Though there is one negative thing.. It doesn't really work as a self standing book. For me this only worked as the first chapters in a book. Which it pretty much is.. But when I read short stories I want the little extra :P Since it is "a book" in a way.. Doesn't know if that make sense xD

I give this first part 4 out of 6 stars. Coz it was great entertainment.. Though you need to continue the series, before anything happens.. Coz so far we only have the beginning.. And not much happened. Until the couple of last pages. :)

So will without of doubt check out the rest one day ;) It has potential so far :P

This story seemed very rushed, and I didn't like it. The switching between present and past tense irritated me -- on top of all the grammatical errors. This author clearly didn't proofread before submitting her story to be published on Smashwords. Also, a short story should have some closure. It read like a book excerpt (first two-three chapters, then cut). She might as well have just released the whole thing together.
