Russell says

Finally, a serious consideration of the biological problems of Clifford's temperature regulation. A dog scaling up to that size isn't effective in a number of ways, and his poor internal systems must be constantly overtaxed just to keep him going. As sobering as this reality check is, I'm glad to see these tough issues being tackled at long last.

Frogs says

Oh, the funny ways a big dog like Clifford uses to keep cool! Filled with suspense and whimsy, which made my twos laugh. They liked predicting what would happen next in Clifford's adventurous search for a breeze!

Jen says

It's summer and Clifford the Big Red Dog is having a terrible time trying to keep cool. He sees other dogs riding in vehicles to stay cool, but it's hard when you're as big as Clifford. He finally finds a spot to cool off and ends up saving some children in the process.

Ealthafer says

I love Clifford books because Clifford and Emily Elizabeth are both such loveable characters. I would use this book in the classroom to work on beginning, middle, and end. The story is pretty straight forward and the students should be able to recite what happened in the beginning, the middle, and the end. Students can also work on predicting and predict what will happen to Clifford each time he tries a new way to keep cool.

Tiffany Neal says

My kiddos love the Clifford books, especially since they can "relate" with our ginormous dog.

Little Miss and the Legomeister says

Clifford's too big to cool off in the usual way. It's a standard Clifford story showing all the unique difficulties a dog his size would have, and then having him save the day in some unusual way because of... his size.

Julia Stephenson says

It's a hot day out and Clifford is in distress. He tries to keep cool in various ways. He tries to drink water and tries to jump into both Emily's and the public's pools. He even tried to ride on top of a truck and takes advantage of air conditioners. Clifford is just too big to keep cool those ways. Then Clifford discovers a waterfall located at the edge of the town, where other people are also in distress. Clifford knows just what to do in order to save them.

Here in San Diego, we have been experiencing unusually hot and humid weather, so I felt like I had to include this particular Clifford title in Storytime today. It is the height of summer and Clifford tries all the usual methods to stay cool, but at his size they don't always work quite right. For instance, watching a dog riding in a car enjoying the cool breeze, Clifford climbs on top of a large truck - which cools him off...until the truck passes under a freeway overpass. He empties swimming pools and fountains, until finally, Emily Elizabeth finds the perfect cooling spot for him: under a waterfall in a park. Not only is he finally happy, but he manages to save a boat load of kids in a canoe who were about to plunge over the falls. You gotta love this dog! We had a lively discussion about all the things my storytime audience did to stay cool this summer and all during the story they continued to share.

Sarah says

On a sweltering day, Clifford tries to find a way to cool off. But a swimming pool is too small, a single fan doesn't help....how can such a huge dog cool down?
