This is literally the only one that I can say for certain that I read. I adored this one as a child. I adored the pants off of hiding letters and history. Yay. Yeah, I didn't want a pony, I wanted to live as a part of the past. One of these days I'll realize that I'm technically part of history, even if it seems so current compared to, well, Spanish Influenza and dying.

Realistic Fiction/mystery

3 girls are on a trail-ride through the forest. Anna, Lulu, and Pam call themselves the “pony pals”. While they are out horseback riding they come across an old letter, actually a really old letter. It was from 1918! When they read the letter, they realized that the girl who wrote it mentioned a secret riding field. The girls were intrigued. Then they saw the letter was for someone with the initials LS. The person who wrote it had the initials of AW. The girls have an amazing adventure trying to find out who these girls were, and where the secret riding field is. They even make a new friend.

I liked this book because it was an exciting mystery. I never read mysteries, but after reading this it makes me want to read more of them.

I especially liked that the girls reminded me of some of my friends. If you love horses as much as I do you will love this book.
