Rory Chambers is an extreme sports expert who helps people to partake in every adrenaline inducing experience that California has to offer. However, his life becomes complicated when it is discovered that, due to a special protein produced by his body, his blood can cure a variety of terminal illnesses, including deadly cancers, and pathogens such as HIV.

When the medical experts report their inability to create a vaccine artificially, Rory finds that there is no shortage of rich and powerful people who are desperate for a second chance... Desperate enough to carve it straight from his body.

Regardless of what his career in extreme sports has taught Rory about fear; nothing can prepare him for the unpredictable ride, and lascivious betrayals that are borne by the human psyche.

When his blood is valued at over $500,000 a pint, and so many dying people are looking for another chance; how will he keep the world from draining him of everything?

One of my top five thriller books of all time! I'm not a spoiler reviewer but I never ever say that coming... Rory character was spot on and to the author, great visual descriptions throughout, that was such a great addition to really build the story. I'm definitely passing this on to a friend to read.

I found the premise of this book intriguing. A man who has properties in his blood to cure AIDS and cancer. I found the science adequately enthralling but was irritated by the need of the author to describe fashion and what people are wearing superfluously at key points of the story. I didn't particularly like Rory Chambers but found him interesting enough to keep reading. I found his appearance at the Oscars out of place but this is set in LA after all.

I hope to catch the second and third parts of this thriller to see what becomes of Rory.

I received this book thanks to a goodreads giveaway.

I have to be honest, this book was definitely not my cup of tea. The idea behind the book is a great idea though, a man who's blood could potentially help save your from AIDS/HIV and cancer but is hunted by everyone around him either good or bad - it's a plot that definitely drags you into it.

That being said I found that the writing for this book got on my nerves slightly, the character Rory and his partner Kelly seemed too cheesy in their love and the way they acted together and too over the top, every single thing needed to be overly described and I had a hard time being fully immersed in the story quite early in the book.

It is not one I would recommend normally to friends, maybe to teens who're just coming out of high school or 20's who don't read often just due to the fact that the writing style didn't really agree with me.

Rebecca McNutt says

The Golden Goose of Los Angeles is like nothing you've ever read before, believe me. It did have the occasional typo or misused word, but otherwise it was very well-written and exciting.

Kechell Jackson says

This is a well written and fully developed story. The story moves at a fast pace and keeps the reader engaged by using present tense; it's like you are being talked to directly. The main character's, Rick Chambers, blood can cure the incurable such as cancer and HIV which causes everyone to want some of him. There is plenty of detail and action. The book ends leaving the reader wanting more.

I highly recommend this book and can't wait for the next one.

Jaq says

Okay, I will be upfront, I was really annoyed with Rory the main character. He's this mix of incredible naivety and selfishness, that just frustrated me. I also have to say, is this guy an American - why isn't he suing everyone, rather than getting himself into some of his more interesting predicaments?

Having said that, the book cracks along, and is quite easy to read. I enjoyed most of it - apart from Rory. (Can you enjoy a book and dislike a main character?)
